

Lesson: Urdu Literature and Mirza Ghalib

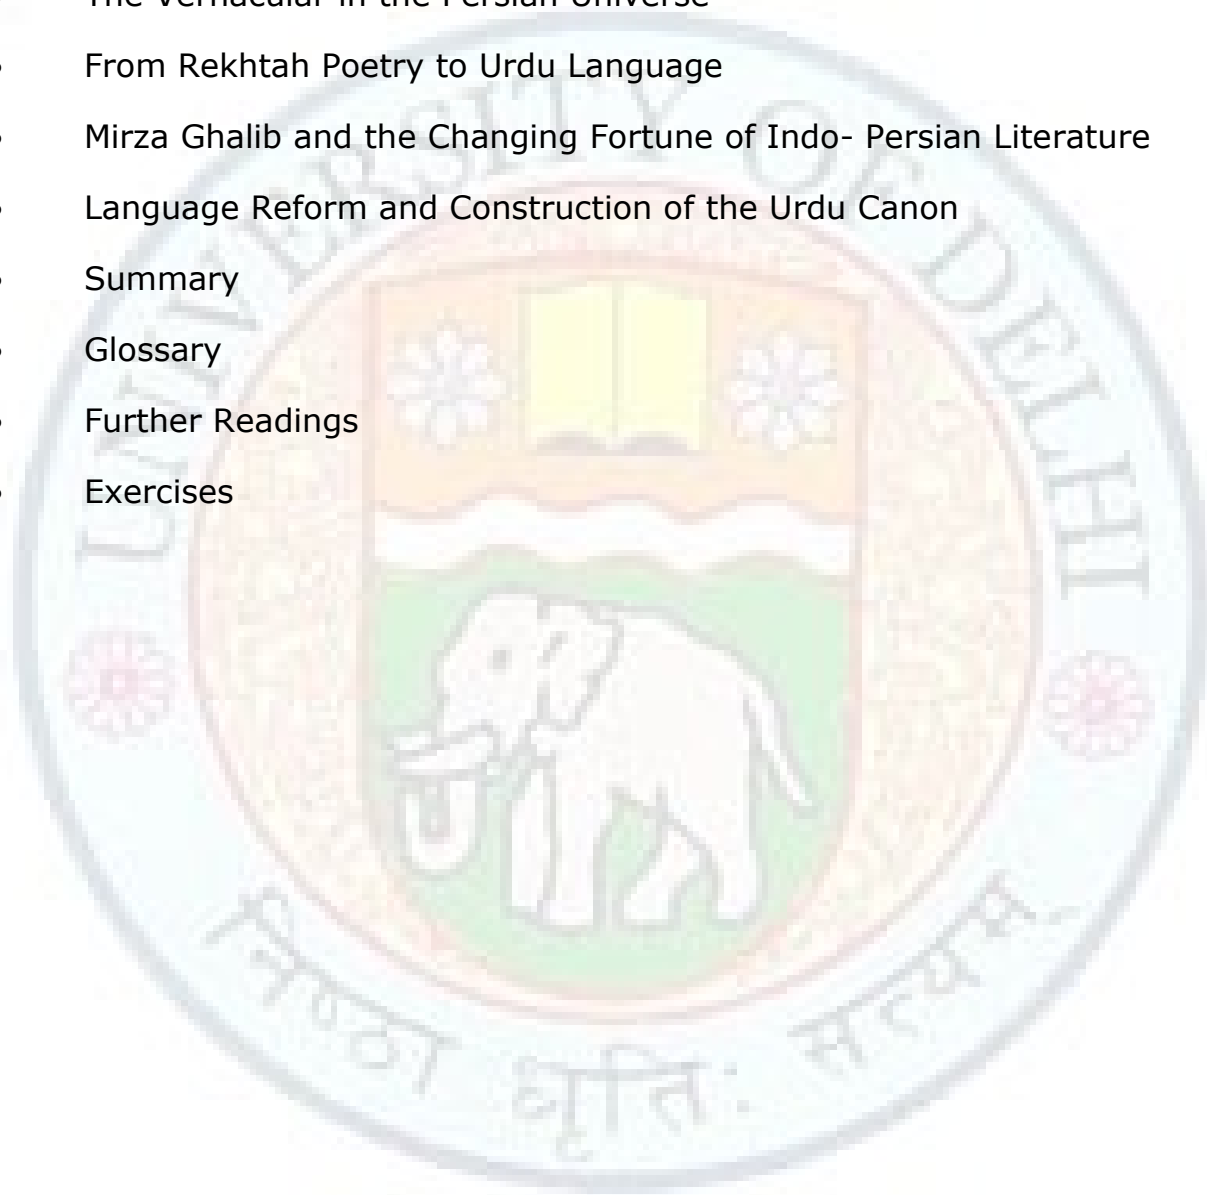

Lesson Developer: Rajak Khan

College/Department: Department of History, University of Delhi

Table of Contents

Chapter 3: Indo-Persian Literature

- The Vernacular in the Persian Universe
- From Rekhtah Poetry to Urdu Language
- Mirza Ghalib and the Changing Fortune of Indo- Persian Literature
- Language Reform and Construction of the Urdu Canon
- Summary
- Glossary
- Further Readings
- Exercises

The Vernacular in the Persian Universe

The rise and fall of Persian in the Indian subcontinent was not an isolated process. As we have seen, political patronage was crucial for the fortunes of Persian but equally critical was the contribution of diverse social and cultural actors like Sufis, merchants, artists, soldiers among others. The domains of the elite and popular culture therefore were not two distinct spheres and connected with each other. This entanglement resulted in the growth of diverse vernacular traditions in north India (Braj, Awadhi, Gujri among others). We will now try and understand how Hindavi language and literature began and acquired prominence in northern India. The literary history of Hindavi has been dominated by colonial constructions of Hindi-Urdu as two distinct linguistic traditions. The narrative of distinct and separate Hindi-Urdu histories does not help much in understanding this complicated and entangled past of these languages.¹ As Shamsur Rehman Farooqi has shown, using the word 'early Urdu' to describe the vernacular tradition of northern India is not correct. 'Urdu' as a language name is a later development. We need to move beyond the arbitrary binary of Hindi versus Urdu in order to appreciate their shared past. In the subsequent discussion we will therefore examine the various historical and cultural aspects that shaped Hindavi literary culture.

As already pointed out, even during the early days of Persian in India poets were appropriating the dialects of the common people. These words and idioms formed the Hindavi corpus of northern India. The language spoken around Delhi was referred variously as Hindavi, Bhasa or Dehalvi. For long it was assumed that that Hindavi grew and acquired the shape of Urdu in northern India in the region of Delhi and Punjab. However after the initial examples of Hindavi poetry of Amir Khusraw we do not have much evidence of the growth of Hindavi in northern India. This language tradition moved further south with the expansion of the Delhi sultanate initially under Khalji and later the Tughlaq rulers. Muhammad Shah Tughlaq (1300-1351) shifted the capital from Delhi to Daulatabad, closer to the Deccan. Subsequently, the Hindavi tradition branched out in Gujarat where it was called Gujri. and further flourished under the Bahmani kingdom as Dakhani. Ali Jawad Zaidi identifies three phases in the growth of Dakhani literature: the first phase lasted till the dismemberment of the Bahmani kingdom around the close of 15th century. It later broke into five parts; of these Dakhini survived at the courts of the Adil Shahis at Bijapur and the Qutub Shahis at Golconda.²

¹ Shamsur Rahman Faruqi. Early Urdu Literary Culture and History. New Delhi :Oxford University Press.,2001,p21.

² Ali Jawad Zaidi. A History of Urdu Literature. New Delhi:Sahitya Akademi , 1993,p39.

Adil Shah II (1580-1626) wrote the famous Kitab-e-Nauras –a treatise on music. This text represents the cultural fusion in literature where these songs glorified not just the Islamic past but also celebrated the divine enjoyment of Krishna worship. Similarly, Muhammad Quli Qutub Shah's poetry was steeped in an intensely Indian colour.³ Here is his description of the spring festival:

Muhammad Quli Qutub Shah(1580-1611 CE)

Source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Muhammad_Quli_Qutub_Shah

Value addition: Interesting Details 5

Dakhani Poetry

O Sweetheart, come let us play Basant, for
You are the moon and I am like a star.
Let us , my love, play Basant to splash
The skies with the red of evening twilight.
I thirst after your darshan, O royal captor!
My sweetheart, let us hug ourselves tight.
I shall not keep you in the eyes but in the heart
For you are ,dear, my life partner.

Source: Ali Jawad Zaidi. A History of Urdu Literature. New Delhi:Sahitya Akademi , 1993,p43.

Apart from poetic creativity, gains were also made in the realm of prose. Mullah Asadullah Wajhi (1580 -1640) penned his prose masterpiece Sab Ras or 'The Tale of Beauty and Heart' in 1635. It successfully incorporates Sanskrit as well as Persian and Arabic vocabulary. This creative phase ended when these states were annexed by the Mughal Empire. In the third phase, the Dakhani element began to decline while it triggered the growth of Urdu literary growth in northern India .After the decline of the Deccan kingdom, the Mughals expanded their control. This resulted in a greater flow of populations and interaction between the north and the south. It is in this context that Mohamamd Vali (1667–1707) introduced his divan(collection of poetry) in Delhi which soon became extremely popular.⁴Vali’s writing showed that the evolving vernacular verse writing in Rekhtah (mixed language) was capable of poetic expression in style and content. In the post-Vali literary culture we can identify a new generation of poets who were consciously writing in Rekhtah poetry.

³ Ibid p43.

Vernacular literary cultures also thrived at the popular and courtly levels. Stuart McGregor highlights ‘four localities as sites of innovation and achievements’.⁵These included Gwalior, the Braj district, Orchha in Bundelkhand and Benares with its hinterland in eastern Uttar Pradesh and Bihar. Stuart McGregor shows that from the fourteenth century onwards Brajbhasha became the popular medium of religious and courtly poetry around Agra. Similarly Avadhi prevailed in the region around Lucknow-Allahabad and was also incorporated by the Sufis in their writings. Maulana Daud compiled his Sufi romance Candayan in Avadhi in 1375 ,Tulsidas wrote Ramcharitmanas in Avadhi and so did Malik Muhamamd Jaisi write his epic poem Padmavat in Awadhi in 1540.

An illustrated manuscript of Padmavat, c1750

Source: <http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Padmavat>

Padmavat depicted the fictionalized account of Alauddin Khilji’s siege of Chittor in 1303. Thomas de Bruijn has highlighted the dialogism in Avadhi

⁴ Ibid p 49.

⁵ Stuart McGregor. The Progress of Hindi, Part 1: The Development of a Transregional Idiom. In Sheldon Pollock(ed.), Literary Cultures in History: Reconstructions from South Asia. New Delhi:Oxford University Press, 2003,p914.

epics.⁶ He shows that Tulsidas's epic rendering of the Ramayana was deeply rooted in the Avadhi epic genre created by Sufi poets. Similarly Jayasi's Padmavat is located in the Indian context and has inter-textual connections with the Rama story. This period also saw the growth and proliferation in the vernacular writings of Kabir, Surdas, Mirabai and other bhakti poets who used multiple vernacular registers of Avadhi, Braj bhasa, Rajasthani in their Hindavi idiom. Here is Kabir's famous poetry.⁷

Value addition: Interesting Details 6

Kabir's Poetry

That Master weaver , whose skill
 Are beyond our knowing,
 Has stretched his warp
 Through the world
 He has fastened his loom
 Between earth and sky,
 Where the shuttle cocks are the sun and moon
 He fills the shuttle with the thread
 Of easy spontaneity
 And weaves and weaves
 An endless pattern
 But now , says kabir, that weaver!
 He breaks apart his loom
 And tangles the thread
 In thread .

Source: John Straton Hawley and Mark Juergensmeyer . Songs of the Saints of India .New Delhi Oxford University Press, 2004.KG pad 150

This interface between the Persian classical literary culture and the vernacular cultures in India is historically evident. Literary scholars have observed that the various forms of literary expressions within Rekhtah reflect absorptions as well as modifications of forms of Persian legacy within an Indian style of poetry, most notably as seen in the Ghazal tradition. Ghazal means conversations with women - its distinct feature is its fragmentary nature. However as Ali Jawaid Zaidi argues, the Ghazal acquired its distinct Indian colour from the Doha tradition of two line units of expression which in Urdu are called shers (couplets). Similarly the qasidah or ode has its roots in the Arabic tradition as a poem written to gain reward

⁶ Thmas de Bruijn., Dialogism in a Medieval Genre :The Case of Avadhi Epics.In Francesca Orsini(ed.) ,Before the Divide:Hindi and Urdu Literary Cullture. New Delhi: Orient Blackswan.p127.

⁷ John Straton Hawley and Mark Juergensmeyer . Songs of the Saints of India .New Delhi Oxford University Press, 2004.

from a patron, but also drew elements from the prashahsti panegyric tradition of Sanskrit. The Barahmasah as a genre in Persian and Urdu literature has its own roots in the Indian subcontinent describing the changing seasons of the years.⁸

Storytelling traditions occupied a pivotal place in south Asia from the time of the Jataka and Panchtantra tales. It is therefore not surprising that the Persian tradition of storytelling, i.e dastan or qissa proliferated and was also transformed in the Indian context. Frances Pritchett shows that qissa literature inherited its stories from Persian oral narrative traditions, as well as from medieval north Indian folktales. Thus, while Qissa-e Hatim Ta'i, was based on an old Arabic tale of Prince Hatim while Simhasan battisi, was a reworked version of the Sanskrit Vikramacarita which recounts the gallant deeds of Raja Vikram⁹ The dialogism of genres resulted in a hybridity of Persian literary forms in south Asia.

Value addition: Interesting Details 7

Qissa or Dastan

Dāstān and qis.s.ah in Persian both mean "story," and the narrative genre to which they refer goes back to medieval Iran. At least as early as the ninth century, it was a widely popular form of story-telling: dastan-narrators practiced their art not merely in coffee houses, but in royal palaces as well. They told tales of heroic romance and adventure--stories about gallant princes and their encounters with evil kings, enemy champions, demons, magicians, Jinns, divine emissaries, tricky secret agents called ayyārs, and beautiful princesses who might be human or of the Parī ("fairy") race. Dastans had no official religious or social purpose within their culture, and therefore no externally prescribed form. They existed for the sheer pleasure of the story-telling experience created by the narrator's artistic authority, they were sustained by the listeners' responsiveness, by the perpetual question, 'Then what happened?' Dastan-narrators drew on the revered national verse epic Shāh nāmah (The Book of Kings) (c1010), and incorporated into its framework folk traditions of all kinds, creating narratives that were swept along by the strong currents of the imagination.

Source: Frances W. Pritchett(ed.), The Romance Tradition In Urdu

⁸ Ali Jawad Zaidi. A History of Urdu Literature. New Delhi:Sahitya Akademi, 1993.p13-18.

⁹Frances W. Pritchett. Marvelous Encounters; Folk Romance in Urdu and Hindi. New Delhi:Manohar, 1998.

. Adventures from the Dastan of Amir Hamza. New York: Columbia University Press. 1991, p 1.

From Rekhtah Poetry to Urdu Language

After Vali many writers took up writing poetry in Rekhtah like Abru , Hatim, Mazim, Mazhar etc. Delhi emerged as the centre of rekhtah poets. This poetic tradition reached new height under the work of Sauda ,Dard and Mir as they represented a major turning point in the history of Urdu literature giving it maturity and sophistication of expression. Mir's ghazals exhibit a preciseness of language that also incorporated different registers of vernaculars now suitably transformed into a powerful Urdu literary language

10

Mir Taqi Mir (1723-1810)

Source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mir_Taqi_Mir

The period saw a proliferation of Mushairas which are a gathering where poets recite their compositions. These gatherings also had their own conventions of appreciation. Literary criticism flourished and reflects the growth and popularity of rekhtah poetry. However this literary success was soon disrupted. Between 1739-1803 Delhi was repeatedly plundered by Persians, Afghans and the Marathas and by rival aspirants for power. Mir voiced the changing times in his poetry.¹¹

Value addition: Interesting Details 8

Mir's Poetry

This bowl of a skull speaks of some mighty man;

¹⁰ C.M.Naim. (ed.) , Zikr -i-Mir: The autobiography of the Eighteenth Century Mughal Poet: Mir Muhammad Taqi Mir . New Delhi: Oxford University Press, 2002. p5.

¹¹ C.M.Naim. (ed.), Zikr -i-Mir: The autobiography of the Eighteenth Century Mughal Poet: Mir Muhammad Taqi Mir . New Delhi: Oxford University Press, 2002. p129.

And the crumbling ruins tell of a mansion grand
This world is a lengthy tale - We told a tiny part;
Now someone else will tell the part that remained

Source: C.M.Naim. (ed.), Zikr -i-Mir: The autobiography of the Eighteenth Century Mughal Poet: Mir Muhammad Taqi Mir . New Delhi: Oxford University Press, 2002. p129.

In such turbulent time, many poets shifted their base to the new prosperous capital of Lucknow in the kingdom of Awadh, where poetry acquired new dimensions in the shia culture of Lucknow. This resulted in the growth of Marsiya poetry in particular. Marsiya is a poem describing events related to the martyrdom of the Prophet's grandson Imam Husain at Karbala in Iraq. Marsiya poems generally consist of six-line units, with a rhyming quatrain, and a couplet on a different rhyme. The famous marsiya poets were Anis and Dabir. Some of the other illustrious poets from Awadh were Shaikh Imam Baksh Nasik, Haider Ali Atish, Babar Ali Anis and Salamat Ali Dabir. C.M Naim observes that one remarkable feature of the marsiya writings in Lucknow is the depiction of the indigenous culture and practices . Consequently, Arab heroes of the story are suitably transformed into the gentle folk of Lucknow.¹²

Mir Babbar Ali Anis(1803-1874

Source: <http://www.poemhunter.com/mir-babar-ali-anees/biography/>

Meanwhile by 1803, the British occupied Delhi and in the next fifty years Delhi experienced what some have termed the 'Delhi renaissance'. This period saw remarkable achievements in the field of literature and learning. Poetry once again flourished at the Mughal court that served more as a cultural arena than a real political centre during the long twilight of Mughal state and saw parallel resurgence of Urdu poetic production under Zauq, Momin and Mirza Ghalib. Mirza Farhatullah Beg has left a fascinating reconstruction of the literary milieu of the period¹³

¹² C.M Naim . The Art of Urdu Marsiya in Milton Israel and N.K Wagle (ed.), *Islamic society and culture(Essays in Honour of Prof. Aziz Ahmad)*New Delhi: Manohar Publication 1983. p109.

Value addition: Interesting Details 9

The Last Musha'irah of Delhi:

A Mushar'irah is held at the aristocratic house between nine and ten at night after dinner and goes on till dawn with a feast of ghazal after ghazal. No formal interval is observed. At Karim-ud-Din 's musha'irah sleep overtakes the mehfil around two or three in the morning. But the poets are instantly wide awake and are ready for the second round the moment a striking ghazal is read. Needless to say no women were present at the old traditional musha'irahs. But since women are objects of longing and despair in much of the ghazal poetry their absence made them all the more desired and intriguing.

Nashist , that is the seating arrangement at a musha'irah was a ticklish matter and the order in which a poet read his ghazal was observed strictly according to established decorum. The great ustada sat in their own groups surrounded by their shagirds and I am sure the aura of their poetic fame was distinctly felt by everyone. The presiding or host poet was assigned the central seat in a more or less circular seating arrangement. In front of him was placed the shama , symbol of the poetic muse. The shama was passed on to the poet whose turn it was to present his ghazal. At Karim-ud-Din 's musha'irah great care was taken in seating the poets . Touchy in this matter were the mughal princes and poets from court poets handled the seating order of his party most tactfully so as to give offence to no one.

Source: Akhtar Qamber(ed.) ,The Last Musha'irah of Delhi: A translation into English of Farhatullah Baig's Delhi Ki Akhri Shama'. New Delhi: Orient Longman 1979,p20.

Mirza Ghalib and the Changing Fortunes of Indo- Persian Literature

Persian continued to shape the poetic sensibility of many Rekhtah poets. Mirza Asadullah Baig Khan, whose pen-name was Ghalib(1797-1869)

¹³ Akhtar Qamber(ed.), The Last Musha'irah of Delhi: A translation into English of Farhatullah Baig's Delhi Ki Akhri Shama'. New Delhi: Orient Longman 1979.

represents the important historical conjecture of the declining but yet vibrant Persian literary heritage increasingly taken over by the rekhtah tradition of poetry. Ghalib preferred writing in Persian but is mostly known for his Urdu works . Critics remark that Ghalib expanded the range of themes of the ghazal genre and utilized conventional Persian and Urdu poetic devices in new ways Thus from this perspective it seems fair to believe that Ghalib was the last Persian poet of the long Indo-Persian tradition and also the first modern poet of Urdu.¹⁴

Mirza Assadullah Baig Khan Ghalib(1797-1869)

Source: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mirza_Ghalib

Value addition: Interesting Details 10

Ghalib's Urdu Verse

It was her beauty I described , and my words that described it
And he is now my rival who was once my confidant
Would that I could have looked out from an even greater height
Would that I had my dwelling place above the throne of God
What special wisdom did I have ? What unique skill was mine?

Source: Ralph Russell(ed.) , Ghalib : Life Letters and Ghazals. New Delhi :Oxford University Press, 2003. p125.

In 1850 , Ghalib was commissioned to write the history of the Mughal dynasty and gained the courtly patronage . This period of relative prosperity came to an abrupt end with the revolt of 1857. The failure of the revolt and subsequent end of Mughal rule and patronage tradition was trampled over by the colonial masters. While Ghalib was himself quite out of sympathy for the revolt for he knew it was bound to fail. Ghalib wrote prolifically even now and maintained a diary- Dastanbu, it narrated the events in Delhi in 1857. He also wrote many letters to his friends with remarkable witticism. These letters form a crucial source of information and also reflect the maturity of Urdu prose.¹⁵ In one such letter he narrated the life in Delhi after British occupied Delhi.

¹⁴ Ralph Russell(ed.), Ghalib : Life Letters and Ghazals. New Delhi :Oxford University Press, 2003. p412.

Value addition: Interesting Details 11

Ghalib's Letter

Many of the wretched people of the city have been driven out and the rest lie here, prisoner of hopes and fear and there is perhaps no balm to soothe the pain of either those within or those without the city. If only those within and those without could have news of each other's lives and deaths. All one can tell with certainty is that everyman wherever he is, is in want. Those within the city who sigh deeply for their fate and those without who rejected by fate and condemned to rove aimlessly their hearts alike carry a full burden of sorrow and their faces alike are pale with the fear of death.

Source: Ralph Russell(ed.), Ghalib : Life Letters and Ghazals. New Delhi :Oxford University Press, 2003. p125.

Ghalib also continued his poetic output after 1857 under the patronage of the Nawab of Rampur but these years marked by hardships which gave a melancholic touch to his writings.

Language Reform and Construction of an Urdu Canon

After the decline of the Mughal state in 1857, Urdu poetry continued to thrive at various princely states like Rampur, Bhopal and Hyderabad. However, the impact of colonialism was felt on both language and literature in south Asia. The Fort William College, Calcutta, was established in 1800 as a language training centre for British colonial administrators. This resulted in translation project of Persian and Urdu texts. However in the colonial discourse about 'useful knowledge', prose began to supersede poetry. Similarly colonial linguistic survey and officials like John Gilchrist emphasized standardized and distinct Hindi and Urdu languages rather than their hybrid forms.¹⁶ Also by late nineteenth century literary reformists began to insist on distinct, purified and reformed Hindi and Urdu literary heritages.¹⁷ The period also witnessed the politicization of language in the form of the Hindi-

¹⁵ Ralph Russell(ed.), Ghalib : Life Letters and Ghazals. New Delhi :Oxford University Press, 2003. p125.

¹⁶ Christopher King. One Language, Two Scripts: the Hindi Movement in Nineteenth Century North India. New Delhi: Oxford University Press, 1994.

¹⁷ Vasudha Dalmia. The Nationalization of Hindu Traditions: Bharatendu Harishchandra and Nineteenth-Century Banaras. New Delhi: Oxford University Press, 1999.

Urdu controversy. In the transformed colonial discourse about 'useful knowledge', Literature was now appropriated for its social-functional role and not for its aesthetic value. The Indo-Persian legacy of Urdu literature was defined as decadent. Literature was now meant for the service of the community and therefore had to be suitably reformed. This argument was presented by three important literary critics who all wrote in the post-1857 context.¹⁸ These were Altaf Husain Hali, Muhammad Husain Azad and Shibli Numani. Frances Pritchett and Shamsur Rehman Faruqi commenting on the reformism most evident in Azad's ĀB-E ḤAYĀT (written in 1880) observe that while this first modern history of Urdu poetry was rich with insights about literary culture but it was also apologetic about the cross cultural influences that went into the making of Urdu poetry and literature.¹⁹

MUHAMMAD HUSAIN AZAD (1830–1910)

Source: <http://www.urdustudies.com/auinfo/azadMH.html>

The Ghazal tradition of Indo-Persian poetry came under severe attack from the late nineteenth century onwards. The Ghazal was characterized as unreal, rhetorical, mechanical, sensual, unnatural, erotic and pessimistic. The emphasis was on writing "natural" poetry that was socially beneficial. Instead of the fragmentary nature of the Urdu ghazal, a theme based nazm tradition of Urdu poetry was sought to be created. Even this process could not undermine the essentially multilingual heritage of Indo-Persian literature. However, the Hindi-Urdu language controversy and the partition of India meant disruption of Urdu literary culture. Nevertheless, Urdu literature continued to be informed by its essentially cosmopolitan heritage even now. It continues to remain popular through poetry and music. The success and growth of any language and literary culture depends on the community of speakers and as long as that would continue the Indo-Persian legacy will survive.

¹⁸ Frances Pritchett. Nets of Awareness: Urdu Poetry and Its Critics. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1994.

¹⁹ Frances Pritchett & Shamsur Rehman Faruqi (ed.) Ab-e-Hayat: Shaping the Canon of Urdu Poetry. New Delhi: Oxford University Press, 2001.

Summary

- Diverse Vernacular languages and literatures evolved in medieval India and enriched the Persian literary culture.
- Dakhani literature shows the diversity of poetic and early prose works in vernacular .
- Avadhi and Braj literatures reflect the diversity of Hindavi literary culture in north India.
- Literary works proliferated not just at courts but also at religious and cultural arenas .
- Poetry remained the most favoured genre within Indo-Persian literature.
- Mirza Ghalib contributed in the shaping of both Urdu prose and poetry.
- The Hindi-Urdu language politics and literary reformism sought to create two distinct literary histories.
- The Colonial period and its language policy marked a shift from hybridity to standardization.

Glossary

Dastan - Story

Musha'ira - Poetic gathering

Marsiya - Elegy

Rekhta - Mixed Language

References

Dalmia Vasudha. The Nationalization of Hindu Traditions: Bharatendu Harishchandra and Nineteenth-Century Banaras. New Delhi: Oxford University Press, 1999.

Faruqi Shamsur Rahman . Early Urdu Literary Culture and History. New Delhi :Oxford University Press,2001.

King Christopher. One Language, Two Scripts: the Hindi Movement in Nineteenth Century North India. New Delhi: Oxford University Press, 1994.

Naim C.M . (ed.),Zikr –i-Mir:The autobiography of the Eighteenth Century Mughal Poet:Mir Muhammad Taqi 'Mir'. New Delhi:Oxford University Press,1999.

Orsini Francesca (ed.), Before the Divide: Hindi and Urdu Literary Culture. New Delhi: Orient Blackswan,2010.

Pritchett Frances (ed.), The Romance Tradition in Urdu : Adventures from the Dastan of Amir Hamza. New York: Columbia University Press. 1991.

Pritchett Frances. Nets of Awareness: Urdu Poetry and Its Critics.Berkeley: University of California Press 1994.

Pritchett Frances W. Marvelous Encounters; Folk Romance in Urdu and Hindi. New Delhi:Manohar, 1998.

Pritchett Frances & Shamsur Rehman Faruqi(ed.), Ab –e Hayat: Shaping the Canon Of Urdu Poetry. New Delhi: Oxford University Press, 2001.

Russell Ralph (ed.), Ghalib :Life , Letters and Ghazals. New Delhi :Oxford University Press ,2003.

Zaidi Ali Jawad. A History of Urdu Literature. New Delhi:Sahitya Akademi, 1993.

Suggested Readings.

Ahmad Aijaz. In Theory: Classes, Nations, Literatures. London, Verso,1992

Ahmad Aijaz (ed.), Ghazal of Ghalib: Versions from the Urdu. New Delhi :Oxford University Press , 1994.

Behl Aditya & Simon Weightman, (ed.), Madhumalti:An Indian Sufi Romance. Oxford University Press, 2001.

Hyder Syed Akbar. Reliving Karbala: Martyrdom in South Asian Memory. Oxford University Press, 2006.

Petievich Carla .Assembly of Rivals: Delhi ,Lucknow and the Urdu Ghazal. New Delhi:Manohar Publications, 1992

Petievich Carla. When Men speak as Women: Vocal Masquerade in Indo-Muslim Poetry. New Delhi :Oxford University Press,2007

Schimmel Annemarie. Classical Urdu literature from the beginning to Iqba.l Wiesbaden : Harrassowitz, 1975.

Essay Questions.

Discuss the impact of the vernacular traditions of India in shaping Persian literary culture.

Discuss the role of Dakhani in the evolution of poetic culture in India.

The Urdu literary tradition is a product of a decadent courtly context. Comment.

Would you agree that Ghalib represented the twilight of Persian and rise of modern Urdu poetry?

The Hindi-Urdu language divide is a product of modern language politics. Comment.

Question Number	Type of question	LOD
	Multiple Choice

Question

Who wrote the Avadhi epic Padmavat?

- a) Malik Muhammad Jayasi
- b) Amir Khusraw
- c) Tulsidas

Correct Option a

Justification/ Feedback for the option a

Khusraw wrote in Persian and Hindavi. While Tulsidas also wrote Ramacharitmanas in Avadhi. It was Malik Muhammad Jayasi who wrote the famous avadhi epic Padmavat in 1540.

Justification/ Feedback for the option b

Type justification here

Justification/ Feedback for the option c

Type justification here

Justification/ Feedback for the option d

Type justification here

Reviewer's Comment:

Question

Identify the illustrious Dakhani literary figure among the following:

- a) Mas'ud Sa'd Salman
- b) Vali
- c) Khusraw

Correct Option | b

Justification/ Feedback for the option a

Mas'ud Sa'd Salman was the early Persian poet at the Ghaznavid court in Lahore. Khusraw served the Delhi sultans. It was Vali who wrote in Dakhani.

Justification/ Feedback for the option b

Type justification here

Justification/ Feedback for the option c

Type justification here

Justification/ Feedback for the option d

Type justification here

Reviewer's Comment:

Question

Who wrote the influential Urdu canonical text Ab-e-Hayat?

- a) Muhammad Azad
- b) Altaf Husain Hali
- c) Shibli Numani

Correct Option | a

Justification/ Feedback for the option a

While Altaf Husain Hali and Shibli Numani were also involved with language reformism. The most influential scholar was Muhammad Husain Azad who wrote the famous text Ab-e hayat.

Justification/ Feedback for the option b

Type justification here

Justification/ Feedback for the option c

Type justification here

Justification/ Feedback for the option d

Type justification here

Reviewer's Comment:

Question Number	Type of question	LOD
+	Match the Following

Question

Match the following
 a)Wajhi i)Dastanbu
 b) Ghalib ii)Sabras
 c) Khusraw iii) Nuh sipihr

Correct Option a)and ii) , b) and i) , c) and iii)

Justification/ Feedback for the option a

All the three texts are important in Indo-Persian literature. Khusraw wrote the classic Nuh sipihr . Wajhi penned the early prose work sabras. Ghalib's diary Dastanbu reflects the growth and maturity of Urdu literature.

Justification/ Feedback for the option b

Type justification here

Justification/ Feedback for the option c

Type justification here

Justification/ Feedback for the option d

Type justification here

Reviewer's Comment:

--

Question

- | |
|---|
| a) Mas'ud Sa'd Salman i) Lucknow
b) Mir Anis ii) Lahore
c) Ghalib iii) Delhi |
|---|

Correct Option	a)and ii) ,b) and i) and c) and iii).
-----------------------	---------------------------------------

Justification/ Feedback for the option a

There were various centres of patronage of Indo-Persian Literature. Mas'ud Sa'd Salman flourished under the Ghaznavid patronage at Lahore . Ghalib represents the twilight of Delhi based Mughal court While Mir Anis flourished at the Shia court in Lucknow.

Justification/ Feedback for the option b

Type justification here

Justification/ Feedback for the option c

Type justification here

Justification/ Feedback for the option d

Type justification here

Reviewer's Comment:

--

Question

- | |
|--|
| a)Habsiyat i)love poetry
b)Ghazal ii)Prison Poetry
c)Qasidas iii) Panegyric poetry |
|--|

Correct Option	a) and ii), b) and i) and c) and iii)
-----------------------	---------------------------------------

Justification/ Feedback for the option a

There are various genres of poetry in Indo-Persian literature. The Ghazal or lyric poetry is the most popular literary form. Qasidas flourished in the courtly milieu narrating the success and qualities of the patron. Habsiyat or prison poetry was written by Mas'ud Sa'd Salman .

Justification/ Feedback for the option b

Type justification here

Justification/ Feedback for the option c

Type justification here

Justification/ Feedback for the option d

Type justification here

Reviewer's Comment:

Question Number	Type of question	LOD
	True/False

Question

Which of these statements is false regarding Prose in Urdu ?

- i) There was no growth of prose within the Urdu Literature.
- ii) Sabras is important prose text written in Dakhani.
- iii) Ghalib's letters reflects maturity of Urdu prose.

Correct Answer / Option(s) | i)

Justification/ Feedback for the correct answer

While poetry was the favoured medium of literary expression in pre modern period. There was also development in the field of prose literature. Sabras(1635) was the first major text and subsequently Ghalib made important contribution in the development of Urdu prose through his letters and dairy writings. The late nineteenth century saw the proliferation of Urdu novels.

Resource/Hints/Feedback for the wrong answer

Reviewer's Comment:

Question

Is this statement true or false?
Hindi and Urdu were always two distinct languages.

Correct Answer / Option(s) | False

Justification/ Feedback for the correct answer

Hindi and Urdu share a closely entangled past. The Hindi-Urdu language divide developed during nineteenth century. When Colonial state policy, native language movement and literary reformist propagated separate language and literary histories .

Resource/Hints/Feedback for the wrong answer

Reviewer's Comment:

Question

Is this statement true or false?
Urdu poetry is product of courtly decadent culture.

Correct Answer / Option(s) | False

Justification/ Feedback for the correct answer

This statement is false. While Urdu poetry thrived on courtly patronage and has distinct tradition of love and erotic poetry. Many poets also expressed mystical and popular ideas in their poetry and also gave description of society and culture like Nazir Akbarabadi.

Resource/Hints/Feedback for the wrong answer

Reviewer's Comment: